WRITING

PERSONAL ESSAY

Some students have a background or story that is so central to their identity that they believe their application would be incomplete without it. If this sounds like you, then please share your story.

The lights shine and the music starts playing. All eyes are on the beautiful quinceañera in her flowing lavender dress, her glittering tiara, and her radiant smile. This is her time and only hers. Start counting. Stride-step-step-stride-step-step. I gather her into my arms and she looks into my face just briefly. I look into hers and see only joy and gratitude. My fear is vanquished and replaced with a pleasant determination. Spin-step-step-spin-step-spin. I let her down and we proceed with the final moments of her inauguration into womanhood.

“How am I supposed to move like that??” I think as the dance instructor shows me how to do my next part in the routine. “Watch how I do it, keep the count in your head, and swing your hips,” she says as she probably sees an incredulous look on my face. I’ve never danced before in my life. My left foot trips my right foot— my body is as stiff as a board— I regularly lose the count of the music— I forget the next step— I step on the feet or dress of my partner. I’m about as elegant as a cow and as slick as sandpaper. I am the only guy and I dance with ten pretty teenage girls. Why did Patricia choose me for this? I have no idea why I agreed to her request. But I can’t quit now. I need a miracle. Maybe a couple.

“The chambelán looks a little strange,” I think as I see myself in one of the many mirrors, inside the cathedral, wearing the selected white tuxedo with lavender vest and tie. It probably doesn’t help that I’m shaking and moving in place trying not to think of what’s going to happen tonight. The damas squeal in delight as an Escalade limousine pulls up outside of the magnificent Cathedral of the Madeleine. As we drive to the party through downtown Salt Lake City, music blasting, everyone dancing and singing in the limo, I start to think that this might be a fun experience after all.

I’m walking through the halls going to my French class when Patricia walks up beside me. This is odd. She is in my math class but I have really never talked to her. She tells me about her upcoming quinceañera and asks me if I would like to be her chambelán. I’m absolutely stunned. She wants me to dance with her? In my shocked state with my jaw most likely on the floor, I tell her that I have to think about it. “Okay, just let me know by Friday. Yeah?” she says and hurries to her next class. I sit down in French and can’t concentrate at all. I am by no means popular, or attractive, or skilled, or anything. And she is pretty much of all of that! I dread dancing and I have never danced before. And she wants me to dance with her in front of a couple hundred people? This is too much for me. I don’t think I can do this. As the day ends and I lie in bed when night finally comes, I start to wonder. Patricia asked me of all the other guys at school and all the other people she knows to be her chambelán. I don’t know why, but she thinks I can do it and she wants me to do it. Sometimes opportunities come and I let them pass by because I don’t recognize their worth. Sometimes I let them pass by because of my weaknesses as an adolescent or as a human. But most of the time I let them pass because I feel inadequate. I am nobody and I can’t do this. But someone else, someone that I don’t even know believes in me. And that is going to be enough for me.
